Confidence Man Was Too Confiding With the Supposed Farmer. From the Detroit Free Press. Waiting at the union depot was a round-faced man with an attractive countenance. eyes that invited confidence, and rather long hair that waved from a fine forehead. He was dressed in clericals and looked the part. When the old farmer took a seat after buying a ticket for Ypsilanti the two fell into conversation. The minister brought the talk around to pickpockets and men who fool you out of your money, and expressed a great dread of them. He clung to this topic until the noise of a row was heard from the outside and he expressed a desire to see what was the matter.

"Come on," he shouted, as he started.

"No, my friend," replied the farmer, "not if you have any money about you. It is like that." "Here, you hold it and my watch until I run out a few minutes, and then I'll hold your valuables while you go."
"All right, don't be too long," and the farmer accepted his trust. When the minister returned the farmer was gone. Never did a clerical masquerade come to a quicker end. He rushed around muttering things profane, kept his hand in his hip pocket, and told everybody but the policeman that he could lick any farmer that ever wore shoe leather. Half an hour later he was in a saloon making things blue. "I'll know him if I ever see him again, I don't care how he's dressed, and I'll cut him into inch squares. I don't 'low any man to make a sucker of me and live to blow about it."

"Some guy cross-counter on the con game, Dick?" "None of your blanked business; but if that mug didn't do the farmer as well as I did the sky-pilot I'll jump off the dock. He had a bunch with him as thick as your arm, too. But he's got all my stuff and some lamb's got to make good It had simply been a case of diamond cut

An Australian Fish Story. From the London Mall.

Writing from Bunbury, West Australia, to a brother in London, Mr. Reginald Shaw relates the following amazing incident, which, he states, happened to one of his party when fishing from the jetty: His friend had baited his hook with a farge whiting, hoping to catch a kingfish, when a shark about seven feet long swallowed it! The angler gently brought the shark to the surface of the water, while a man working on the jetty came to his as-sistance with a big iron hook, and after several ineffectual attempts to jab the hook into the shark's mouth the latter got away.

On pulling up his line the fisherman found that he had lost the whiting bait, but had hooked two large ribs of beef from the stomach of the shark. Then, to the amuse-ment of the crowd, one of whom remarked, "Well, exchange is no robbery," he landed the beef safely on the jetty.

DISTRICT VISITORS HAGERSTOWN NEWS GRIST

LOCAL PEOPLE WHO HAVE VISITED READING ROAD IS STILL AFTER

Day-Strikes That Have Occurred on the Grounds.

Special Correspondence of The Evening Star. BUFFALO, May 25, 1901. Last Saturday evening the director of the United States geological survey, Mr. Chas. D. Wolcott, and Mrs. Walcott and the president and director general of the exposition were tendered a reception in the mines building. It was the first social event on the grounds, and Dr. David T. Day of the survey, who is superintendent of the mines and mining exhibits of the exposition, was warmly congratulated on the excellent condition of the exhibits and the building. Both President Milburn and Director General Buchanan expressed indebtedness to Mr. Walcott for the assistance he has, as the head of the survey, extended the exposition. Dr. Day made the introductory remarks and took occasion to elaborate on his hobby here. It is an empty case which he has set aside for new minerals to be he has set aside for new minerals to be discovered during the Pan-American year. A number of facetious comments on this were made to the effect that the doctor is "up to date and ahead of time." After the speaking the guests were served refreshments in the beautiful horticultural hall, amid luscious fruit and fragrant flowers—

a Washington floral establishment having one of the most attractive displays of roses. District Visitors. The French ambassador, Jules Cambon, and Mr. O. T. Crosby, chairman of the committee appointed by the Washington Board of Trade to further the plans for District of Columbia day at the exposition, arrived in Buffalo from Chicago and called on Director General Buchanan. They were accompanied by Mr. W. V. Cox of Washington, who is executive officer of the government board. District day plans were talked over at length and Mr. Buchanan expressed pleasure in the progress which has been made in the arrangements. He is particularly interested in having the peculiar and model form of municipal government of the national capital illustrated here in a proper manner, and he was pleased to hear that Commissioner Macfarland had been asked by the District committee to speak on the occasion. The date set is September 3, and the trip will be doubly attractive for Washingtonians by reason of Labor day coming on the second of that month. This holiday is probably one of the most popular in Buffalo, and will, of course, be recognized with unusual ceremonies.

Among the Washingtonians on the grounds were ex-Senator and Mrs. Davis of West Virginia, and Mr. Charles R. Hendley. Miss Frances B. Johnston spent yesterday and the day before in seeing the snow. Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Holmes have returned to Washington, as have Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Witherspoon. Mr. O. J. Field of the Department of Justice is here looking after matters connected with his department's exhibit in the government building. Other Washingtonians who have visited the exposition are Mrs. S. Price Hutson and Mr. Paul E. Sleman.

Two colored men were overheard discuss ing the exposition in a street car the other day, and if what they said is the opinion of the negro element at large in this locality they are very much disgruntled with the lack of recognition and employment of their race on the exposition grounds. One remarked that the exposition company itself has not employed a single negro and very few of the exhibitors or concessionaires have done so either. In fact, one hardly ever sees a colored man on the grounds, nor in the city. There are a few colored waiters in the restaurants, and these are men who were at the Nashville, Omaha and other previous expositions. It was remarked hat this condition is due to the influence of the labor unions, and that employment seems to be given only to foreigners. This was quite probable since the working class of Buffalo is al-most wholly made up of the foreign element. The negroes here seem to believe that this exposition will, in this respect, be the same as at the world's fair, outset no negroes were employed, but before the fair was well started the Germans, Irish and other nationalities proved inefficient and negroes were substituted to do all the labor work.

The unprecedented number of strikes on the grounds has made the cost of this exposition far greater than it would have been if no strikes had occurred. In each instance of a strike, so far as can be learned, the wages of the men have had to be increased. The negroes say that their race is not given to striking, and this does not seem to be denied. Speaking of strikes, a very amusing one was that of a number of Indians, who had been brought to the exposition from a nearby reservation. They were engaged at the time on the construction of a bark house. Their employer came out to the grounds one morning and was very much lazily, whittling sticks and playing with pebbles. He asked one of the chiefs why it was that the men were not at work as s that the men were not "Struck; "Struck," was the reply. "Struck," "Nothing," what have they struck for?" said the chief, "just struck." It is needless to say that they were speedily returned to their reservation and others brought here. It was not surprising, however, that they should have felt their turn had come to strike, even if for nothing, for it is not out of the ordinary on the exposition grounds. There is some little anxiety existing in exposition and railway circles in the matter of handling the crowds who will come out to the exposition on the street cars. The railroad companies did not begin the work of putting in additional tracks and terminal facilities until almost the opening of the exposition. They have really not completed the work yet. There is any number of switches, turn-stiles, wire fence and other fixtures, which have been provided but it is very doubtful whether the arrangements as they now seem to be determined upon, will be ample and practicable. The cars of nearly every line in the city will come out to the grounds, but the congestion on Main street and Elm-wood avenue will more than likely be the cause of considerable delay and confusion. On these thoroughfares most of the cars run for two or three miles. The New York Central's Belt Line is quite satisfactory and will carry a large portion of the traffic. As would naturally be expected, nearly every one wants to come into the exposition by the West Amherst street gate, for this is the nearest to the midway and the larger buildings. It might be stated that every one expects very large crowds, and everything seems to point this way.

Hotel and boarding house rates still remain at the maximum. Transient visitors will have no trouble in securing accommodations, but the individual who stay for any considerable length of time will find that either very high rates must be paid or unsatisfactory accommodations as to service and location put up with.

From the Detroit Journal.

Having gone to War, the Eagle was speedily made aware of his Limitations. "My tongue," quoth the grand old bird, sadly, "seems to be made for Screaming rather than for Licking Revenue Stamps!"

WESTERN MARYLAND.

Special Correspondence of The Evening Star.

HAGERSTOWN, Md., May 30, 1901. It is now claimed as a certain fact that the Reading railroad is after the Western Maryland railroad. It is one of the three proposed purchasers referred to by Mayor Hayes of Baltimore in his statements since his return from his recent inspection of the latter road. In this connection it is regarded as significant that President George F. Bear of the Reading railway has been on an inspection tour of the West ern Maryland. The two roads connect at Shippensburg, and with the Western Maryland added to that system the Reading would have a direct route to Williamsport and also from the coal regions to Baltimore. John Moser, Mrs. Thomas Doyle and Mrs. Max G. Shives of Hancock, this county are heirs of the Moser estate, valued at $8,000,000 to $10,000,000. It includes coal lands in Schuylkill and Carbon counties, Pa., operated by the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company, and against which a suit is now pending in the circuit court at Pottsville, Pa., to dispossess them as trespassers. The parties named above have been offered $10,000 apiece for their interest in the estate by an association of capitalists. Robert D. Bartley, who was a nephew of the late John Sherman, and who was at one time a prominent actor, died in abject pov-erty several days ago at his home in Newville, Pa., aged fifty-three years. Bartley and his wife, whose stage name was Marie Durand, had been living in Newville for the past fifteen years and were well known throughout the Cumberland valley.

The break in the fourteen-mile level of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, above Four Locks, which occurred during the recent high water, has been repaired and naviga-

Variety of Work. From the Regiment. One of the most interesting features of the English army life presented to the layman in India is furnished by the remarkable efficiency of the elephant brigade, most highly developed through the skill of the Burmese in handling the giant animals Their usefulness in India can scarcely be imagined by one not familiar with the amount and variety of work which they accomplish, but it would be a serious mis take to imagine that this degree of usefulness is attained through any aptitude of the unwieldy animals or natural tendency toward it. It is due solely and entirely to the wonderful ability of the natives in training the huge animals and overcoming their natural inclinations. This cannot b oo highly praised. Neither must it be imagined that the use of elephants in army ife is not attended by great disadvantages not the least of which is the difficulty with which they are transported. Naturally, the elephant is not an intelligent animal. He can be taught remarkable things, in which his strength and encurance play an important part. He can never, however, perform these feats without continual attendance skillful hands, however, it is remarkable.

The transformation facilities which are provided for the sole use of the elephant are quite as remarkable. I witnessed recenty, adds the writer, the loading and detrain railway. Both were remarkable processes. In loading, a rope is fastened to his foreleg, and a lot of natives haul and pull at it to induce the animal to take the first steps into the car. This is only accomplished. however, by admonishing him in the paunch by means of a tusk. The first step taken is rapidly followed by the others, until he the task is accomplished comparatively easily, however, when compared with the next. At first he is timid and slightly s wonderful to behold. Though he may ride a hundred times, he never overcomes this fear, though it is much more pronounced when he takes his initial ride ay, two months' acquaintance with civilization. He rends the air with wild trumpetngs, endeavors fruitlessly to escape, and only ceases his efforts when the car has the elephants by sea the difficulties are al most as great. White Lead a Deadly Poison. Paris Corr. the Lancet. A vigorous campaign is being carried on against the use of blanc de ceruse (carbonate of lead) in painting. This is in accordance with a resolution passed by the superior council of hygiene of France. which ranked white lead among the deadly poisons. It is well known that this pigment is the common cause of the lead pois-oning so widespread among painters. The director of posts and telegraphs has foroldden its use in all the offices under his control, and in addition the painters of Grenoble have gone on strike to demand that all employers should use zinc white instead of lead white. Zinc white is far less poisonous, but more expensive, as owing to its want of "body" more coats have to be laid on. The painters have sent asking for their support. They also ask for the subscriptions of medical men to be paid into the strike fund in the name of those principles of hygiene and sanitation upon which medical men are always insist-

REIGN OF THE DANDIES. Gorgeous Male Raiment During the Days of King George II.

From the London Argosy. In the glorious days of King George II men wore silk or velvet coats of all colors Wadelal to Affudu, but it exceeded all ex-pectations. We had days of incessant danof the rainbow. They tripped mincingly along upon their toes, supporting upon their along upon their toes, supporting upon their heads a wheelbarrow full of peruke covered with a bushel of powder, their "Steinkerke" was sprinkled with snuff, their sword knots trailed almost on the ground, and their canes dangled from the fifth butand their canes dangled from the fifth button; pearl-colored slik stockings and redheeled shoes completing their costume. It seems almost as though one of "those goddesses the Gunnings" had penned the following lines to George Selwyn at Paris in 1766, instead of the sporting Earl of March (subsequently "Old Q."). "The muff you sent me by the Duke of Richmond I like prodigiously, vastly better than if it had been 'tigre' or of any glaring color; several are now making after it." And again in 1776 he writes "Pray bring me two or three

During this period he became the model of all men who wished to dress well, and when he had struck out a new idea he would smile at its gradual progress classes. To the last of his stay in England he continued to wear powder, rather prid-ing himself upon preserving this remnant of the "vielle cour." His clothes were a perfect study. The coat was generally of blue cloth, and its collar raised against the back of the head like the hood of a monka style familiar to us in pictures and minia-tures of the period—the buckskin or nankeen breeches were so incredibly tight that labor and could only be taken off in the Then came a waistcoat about four inches long, open on the chest, displaying a stiff white muslin cravat. Hessian boots river was alive with others. There were at least forty, and there might have been completed the costume, and to these the Beau paid particular attention. They were commonly reported as being blackened "au vin de champagne"; at any rate, two shoemakers were supposed to insure the perfectness of their fit, one made the right and the other the left foot. He had three glovers for his gloves, one of whom was ex-clusively charged with the cutting out of flis thumbs. Three hair dressers were like-wise engaged to dress his hair. As for the personal appearance of this sublime dandy, personal appearance of this suctime dandy, "his face," we read, "was rather long, his features neither plain nor ugly, his forehead unusually high, hair light brown, whiskers inclined to be sandy, eyes gray and full of oddity." His conversation, without having the wit and humor of Lord Alvanley, another of the dandles, was highly agreeable and amusing; indeed, Brummell has never been surpassed or equaled since. The Prince of Wales would frequently come of a morning to the Beau's house in Chesterfield street to witness his tollet, and to acquire the art of tying his own neckerchief "a la mode." For many years, notwithstanding the great disparity of rank, Brummell continued the prince's istimate friend. At last, however, a cool-ness sprang up between them, and the "mirror of fashion" was forbidden the royal presence. . . . The prince-then king-saw the poor dandy once many years after when passing through Calais. Thackeray says: "The bankrupt Beau sent him then a snuff box with some of the snuff he used to love, as a piteous token of remembrance and sub-mission, and the king took the snuff and ordered his horses and drove on and had not the grace to notice his old companion, favorite, rival, enemy, superior." By mell, of course, had many successors, "the old order changeth." and none of them ever attained to the Olympian heights of his dandyism, not even the elegant d'Orsay. who for a time was constituted the king of fashion and held poor Brummell's

AMONG THE HIPPOPOTAMI.

So Many in the Water It Was Imposalble to Get by Them. From the London Telegraph.

I went in a large native dugout cance to shoot a hippopotamus to feed my men. In From the Ladies' Home Journal. a few minutes we came among a herd of fifty to sixty of them. Large crocodiles were floating all around the boat, and did not dive until we came a few yards from them. Thirty yards ahead of me I spotted a large hippo-as we call the animal-and sent him a shot from my .577 express. It hit him just between the eye and the ear, and ought to have gone straight into the brain. As soon as he was struck he rose out of the water. Firing another shot at his body, I ordered the men to make for the bank, as, in case he should attack us and capsize the boat, the crocodiles would have made short work of us. I had the utmost trouble in getting the men to obey orders, as they wanted the meat, and cared little for the danger. The animal became more and more infuriated, and his antics were extraordinary. It was the first time I had seen a hippo behaving in such a way, as usually when hit they sink and either are no more seen or else float dead from a quarter of an hour to one hour afterward. Three times the beast reared out of the Three times the beast reared out of the water, making toward us, and twice he fell on his back and rolled under the water. I put several more shots into him. It was getting quite dark, and to my men's great disgust I ordered them to return to the landing place. Since I have had more experience of the Nile hippos I congratulate myself upon having put a safe distance between the wounded beast and our boat. At this very spot, some months before, a steel boat was attacked by a hippo, although the beast had not been wounded, and the oc-cupants of the sinking craft had barely time to run her near the bank when she went down.

I had been promised a hard journey from tom of the boat, rifle in hand, while my trusted sergeant major, Wana Omari, kept watch on the other side. Fifteen minutes never clapsed without our coming across troops of hippos, and these became a regular terror. The moment they saw our boat they made a dash for it. At first, seeing my man afraid, I laughed at them, telling them that the hippos were much more frightened than they, but I soon became more concerned than the men or the hipmore concerned than the men or the hip-pos. We were going on beautifully, fol-lowing the deep channel of the river, which was carrying us with a three-knot cur-rent, when the man at the rudder turned 1776 he writes "Pray bring me two or three bottles of perfumes and some patterns of velvets that are new and pretty."

Almost to the last moment of his life a piece of rich waistcoating was as much an object of attraction to the great Marquis Wellesley as it would have been to any of the most frivolous-minded young dandies about the town. Indeed, this nobleman would frequently sit alone in solitary state, "en grande toilette," with his blue ribbon and garter, as if about to appear at a royal "levee."

In the year 1798 there arose on the horizon of fashion, or rather there blazed in its full meridian, that wonderful phenomenon of elegance, George Bryan Brummell. Forn of elegance, George Bryan Brummell forn us. I did not feel like taking a snapshot water are human at the rudder turned sharp round, and took us ln shallow water, "Wever mind hippos, they won't human true. Go on." He reluctantly returned to the channel, when first a head, then another, then haif a dozen more, bobbed out of the water. "Look sharp! I asked, "Master, there are hippos ahead," he another water. "Look sharp! Bring my cannot be to the channel, when first a head, the rudder turned sharp round, and took us ln shallow water. "Nev dived, and three seconds later was only four feet from the boat. I scarce knew what to do. If I fired and shot him, the rate at which he was going would bring him right under the boat, and just one single dying struggle would send us flying into the air. I covered him and whather into the air. I covered him, and whether the movement frightened him, or whether he thought better of it, he dived, and his head just rubbed the side of the boat. I had not recovered from my surprise when crack went a shot behind me; the men rowed for dear life into a shallow place, and, turning round, I saw a huge hippe struggling in the water within ten yards of us. My man had shot him within five yards of the boat, as he was making for it. Luckily there was a large stretch of shallow water close to us, and we got into it; be-hind us, the infuriated monster, who had only been wounded, was rearing, plunging and trying to get at us. We turned the boat round, and then witnessed a wonder-ful sight. The hippo could not swim to us, but got in shallow water and tried to get at us. Badly wounded, he fell on his knees, rose out of the water, tried to get on the sand bank, fell back, rolling over, on the sand bank, fell back, found over, and ultimately forced his way toward us. Bang went my eight-bore at thirty yards, and, incredible as it may seem, the build struck on his back and glanced off, cutting struck on his back and glanced off, cutting a deep furrow in his skin. A second shot hit him, and he rolled over, but recovered > broad, with half a dozen channels running between submerged islands of reeds, You might have got on one of these islands, but you would never have reached the mainland. To shoot at another hippo meant only to increase our danger, as, if we merely wounded him, it would infuriate the beast, and if we killed him it would not drive the others away. I therefore decided to let all my men fire volleys into the water between us and the hippos. I had ten guns, and we fired three volleys, after which, to our great relief, the whole herd dived and we could see them 200 yards or so higher up the stream. For five days this sort of thing went on. We sometimes found the stream absolutely obstructed with the herds. Twice we shot some of them charging us, and once we were followed for twenty minutes by a huge bull, who, luckily, kept some fifty yards behind us. There were only a few places where we could land, as between us and the bank stood hundreds of yards of reeds, through which we could not force a passage. Here and there we found small channels in the vegetation, cut by natives to pass with their boats, and after rowing for eight to ten hours we used to force our way through one of these to halt for the night. should never have found these passages but for friendly hippo hunters, who, prom-ised a present, showed us the way. The pluck of these native hunters is truly wonderful. They go out in the smallest of dugout canoes, some of them not more than ten feet long. They carry a long spear with a heavy iron head ten inches long, with one big barb. A stout rope is fixed to the head of the spear, and runs along the haft, to which it is tied. The end of the rope, about twenty feet long, is fastened to a large block of very light wood; they paddle among the hippos, wait for they paddie among the hippos, wait for one to rise, and dig the spear into it; the beast dives, but the log of wood, which floats on the surface of the water, always shows them where he is. Pigeon Valet to a Crow,

"Tom" was the name given to a lordly young crow. Beauty was a snow white pigeon of about the crow's age, with whom he was reared. Just how it came about we never knew, but we soon discovered that Beauty regularly acted as maid-of-all-work to Tom. She fetched and carried morsels of food at his imperious command, and one of her unvarying duties was the preening of her master's feathers. Tom was very much of a dandy; his coal black plamage always appeared perfectly dressed and shining, but the arduous labor of his toilet was performed for him twice every day by the humble and affectionate pigeon. Our fine gentleman would come in from a roll in the dust or a dip in the fountain, and, seating himself upon a certain railing, utter a short, sharp call. Instantly Beauty would descend to his side and begin her task, fluttering anxiously from side to side as she worked drawing each shining black feather care fully out to its full length in her pink bill; Tom, meanwhile, dozing luxuriously with closed eyes, after the manner of the complacent patron of a skilled barber. If Beauty unfortunately pulled a feather too hard a squawk and a sudden peck informed her of her mistake.
